WIT AND OTHERWISE.

—Drinking like a fish makes the head swim.

—An old bachelor being asked if he had ever witnessed an execution, replied: "No, but I once saw a marriage."

—"Yes," said Johnny, "lapene may be the Latin for 'slip,' but when mother laps us it usually means a slipper."

—It is odd and something melancholy to see a man trying to "make up his mind" when he has no material on hand to work with.

—This is the latest for wedding invitations in Boston: Come around and see us capture a mother-in-law at eight o'clock sharp.

—It is now claimed that the first time the expression "Eureka" was used, was when Socrates sat down on a tack for which he had been looking.

—"Humph!" said a young gentleman at a play with a young lady, "I could play the lover better than that myself." "I would like to see you try," was the naive reply.

—"What pretty children, and how much they look alike!" says C—, during a visit to a friend's house. "They are twins," his friend explains. "What, both of them!" exclaims C., greatly interested.

—In the report of a "swell wedding" it was written: "Her dainty feet were encased in shoes that might have been taken for fairy boots," but the compositor made it read, "shoes that might have been taken for ferry boats."

HOME DOCTOR.

The Cause of Ringworm.

Ringworm of the scalp is generally more difficult to cure than ringworm of the body, the reason being that the fungus is more difficult to reach when remedies are applied to hairy parts. The hair must be cut as close as possible all over and round the patch. It often goes to a mother's heart to have to rob a pretty child of its flowing locks, but if she be a wise woman she will steel her heart for the trial, for we are sure that the long duration of many cases of ringworm is entirely due to the unwillingness of friends to permit the only proper and rational treatment. The hair having been removed and the part having been moistened by the application of hot-water dressing for a time, the best remedy is to apply very carefully and thoroughly with a brush a freshly-prepared solution of sulphurous acid, which (if good) should possess the characteristic and penetrating odor of a burning sulphur match. Carbolic acid and glycerine creosote ointment, and sulphur ointment, are also favorite remedies. During the treatment, the part should be kept perfectly clean, and the local remedies should be applied at least twice a-day. The treatment of these two varieties of ringworm must not, however, be entirely local in all cases. Vegetable fungi do not grow on all soils, and the healthy skin of a child is probably quite incapable of nourishing them. Ringworm probably always shows one of two things, either that the child is out of health, or that the skin, either from dirt, neglect, or accident, has become irritable and slightly inflamed. It is necessary to attend to these points, and to give constitutional and other remedies if the child be in need of them, and to give the most scrupulous and unremitting attention to cleanliness. It is a foolish, a dangerous, and always a troublesome practice to allow the hair of children to grow long. In this state it requires an enormous amount of attention, it is kept clean only with difficulty, and affords a dangerous lurking place for vermin, or the seeds of fungi, which, for ought we know to the contrary, are always floating in the air ready to take root directly a fitting soil is afforded them. It is the fashion on the Continent to crop the hair of children as closely as possible, and it would be well if the custom were more general in this country.

Cleanliness.

The part which the skin plays in the regulation of the bodily heat is not adequately estimated. The envelope of complicated structure and vital fuction which covers the body, and which nature has [illegible]

A Wonderful Lightning Freak.

Glen Sutton, P.Q., was visited the other day by about the freakiest and most versatile streak of lightning we ever heard of. During a heavy shower there, the lightning struck a house owned, we believe, by a man named Larush, and occupied by a Mr. Odette. At the time of the shower Odette was sitting at the dinner table, and there were five or six persons besides in the house. The lightning struck the chimney first, tearing it away down to the first floor and scattering the bricks and plastering in all directions; it disjointed all the rafters on one side of the roof, struck a clock in the room, tore the insides all out of it, melted the link connections of a watch chain which hung, with the watch, under the clock; threw the watch into another room, knocked a saucer from Odette's hand and burned a hole in the table cloth just in front of him, took a prop-stick from an upstair window and carried it through a down stair room, tore a big stone out of the cellar wall, and knocked a pork barrel into splinters, besides making itself conspicuous in other ways. Strange as it may seem, no one in the house was hurt, though Odette was considerably astonished; and a school teacher who was there at the time was so shocked that she fainted after the lightning had finished its capers and withdrawn. Altogether, it was a wonderful performance, such as occurs very seldom.

Domestic Medicine.

CHEERFULNESS AS A MEDICINE.

In Cassell's Magazine for May a very sensibly written article, entitled the "Family Doctor," appears, advocating common-sense views of medicine, which it would be well if we, observes the Medical Press and Circular, could see widely embraced among the people. Remarking on the usefulness of hope in curing disease, the author speaks encouragingly of the influence exerted on a patient by cheerfulness in himself; and consequently it will follow that it is the duty of the medical attendant to encourage this feeling to the fullest extent. There are few practitioners who have not again and again witnessed the exhilarating effect produced by a growing confidence in his own improvement on the part of the patient. The more generally this is recognized as a potential factor in recovery from disease, the easier will be the duty falling to the physician.

—Steel lace is a new trimming.

—Philadelphia girls like the Jersey.

—Turbans are worn for travelling hats.

—Nun's cloth with a border is pretty and new.

—Bright greens are coming into fashion in Paris.

—Shoulder belts of pansies are effective with black gowns.

—Sea-green flannel is the new material for yachting suits.

—Gray and yellow is the last combination in handkerchief dresses.

—Clusters of crushed poppies are set under the brims of white hats.

—A new matting stamped with flowers in natural colors is called "Tung Sin."

—Ostrich feathers trimmed the wedding dress of an English bride the other day.

—Glass buttons enclosing insects or flowers are to come next. They are called "Buffon."

—Sweetwilliams make pretty throat bouquets for ladies, and last even longer than carnation.

—Artificial ice, made of certain chemical salts, is used for skating at some of the summer resorts.

—The Sultan has given jewels worth $15,000 to Lady Layard, the wife of the former minister to Turkey.

—Seven pairs of gold ear-rings, of one pattern, were among the presents received by a bride the other day.

—The daughter of W. H. Vanderbilt is to marry Lord Dupplin, who was divorced from his last wife in 1876.

—Spanish women do not like the thin, slender feet which French and American women consider the prettiest.

—Dark Japanese umbrellas are as ugly as anything can be, but they are cheap, and some women carry them.

—The plain hem, which is the proper finish for the skirts of undraped cotton gowns, may have several tucks above it.

—Pale lavender hydrangeas decorate the parlor windows of young ladies in whose cases the heliotrope fever has raged high.

Growth of the Hair.

There are three reasons why woman's hair is longer than men's: First, she has no hair growth on her face, and so has a larger supply of hair-forming material for the scalp; second, the diameter of her hair being larger, it is less liable to break; third, being usually less engaged in mental labor or business worry, she has a more constant and even supply of blood to the scalp. [illegible]

A Ten-Thousand-Dollar Girl.

Lord Brackenbury.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of "Barbara's History," [illegible]

At length Saturday came again—the Saturday on which Lancelot was due at the Grange. "I think you will hardly see me," he said, "before this day week." These were his words. Had she not repeated them to herself a dozen times a day ever since? And now here was Saturday. It had been long enough on the way; but it was come at last. And Lancelot?

She did not once ask herself, "Will he come? late?" That he might for any cause, be a day behind, was a possibility that never once occurred to her. She would as soon have expected the sun to put off rising.

However, he did not come early. It was an uncertain, stormy day, and the weather kept visitors away. Mid-day passed, and the afternoon hours struck at intervals that seemed twice their ordinary length. Never had time gone so slowly. By-and-by, as the day began to darken, she put on a thick shawl and went into the garden. Here she walked slowly up and down, watching the ragged cloud-drifts as they coursed across the sky, and listening to the wind among the trees.

It was not a cheerful garden at the best of times; and now, all dark and damp, with dead leaves rotting in the paths, and boughs dark against the sky, it looked forlorn enough. The old summer-house too, was fast falling to ruin, and the sun-dial was long since broken.

"Poor Cuthbert!"

Ay, poor Cuthbert! The place always reminded her of him. It was there they sat. It was here he put his betrothal ring upon her finger. That ring was locked away now. She had not worn it for years; she should never wear it again. It had passed into a relic.

All at once she held her breath and listened. Surely she heard something?—a faint, indefinite something that came and went with the wind, and resolved itself presently into the measured beat of galloping hoofs. Then her heart gave a leap, and she went round by the cherry orchard as far as the little gate that opened into the court yard. Here she waited, and still the galloping hoofs drew nearer. Then they echoed under the gateway, and Lancelot rode into the court-yard.

He made straight for the porch, dismounted, and in the act of dismounting saw her where she stood.

"Did you expect me?" he asked, throwing his reins to Reuben.

"Yes, I was sure you would come."

SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1880.

The Canadian marksmen seem to have [illegible] better success in England than the so called Canadian cricketers. Besides winning two matches at Altcar last week, on the opening day at Wimbledon, two of the Canadian team—Mills and Bailey were successful in the match for the [illegible] prizes, having made 33 points out of a possible 35.

[illegible] 12th passed off quietly in Montreal. The original arrangement of the [illegible] to have a public burial of the remains of Hackett at 11 A. M., to be followed by the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the monument which the [illegible] of the order purpose erecting to [illegible], was changed on the evening [illegible] to an early hour, and the ceremony took place about [illegible] A. M., in the presence of a small company, and without excitement. The change was due to a [illegible] issued by the Catholic Union, requesting its members to meet at their [illegible] at 9 A. M., for, it is presumed, the purpose of preventing a demonstration. [illegible] altogether probable that if the original arrangements had been carried out [illegible] would have taken place between the opposing factions, and more [illegible] ensued. The Orange leaders [illegible] their good sense in making the [illegible]. It may seem humiliating to [illegible] to have to give up their rights as citizens of a free country, they [illegible] to protected in, but on [illegible] privileges in the interest of the [illegible] and the peace of the city they [illegible] that [illegible] could gain by parts [illegible].

[illegible] war cloud is looming up dark [illegible] east. Russia and China [illegible] already at open hostilities in [illegible] Asia, although war has not yet [illegible] declared between the two [illegible]. In the present state of the [illegible] it seems incredible to be [illegible] that the Chinese government would [illegible] a war, which if [illegible] must [illegible] prolonged, expensive and useless [illegible]. The people are already [illegible] almost to open revolt with the [illegible] of the burdens which have been [illegible] upon them by an imperial autocrat [illegible] have been dragged down to pauperism and starvation to gratify an insatiable grasping after territory, and the prospect of having their burden still further increased by an entirely useless encounter [illegible] they have no sympathy, may [illegible] the last straw to their endurance [illegible] the signal for a universal uprising [illegible] will result in the overthrow of an [illegible] which has for years kept the [illegible] and enterprise of the people in [illegible]. So far the Chinese [illegible] apparently the best of the encounter [illegible] and the reports indicate that they are altogether better prepared for a struggle than their opponents.

Turkey seems determined to resist all attempts that have been, and are continually being made to save her from her inevitable destiny—complete extinction from the map of Europe. The Sultan declines to abide by the decision of the Berlin Conference of the powers of Europe, which unanimously conceded a part of his territory to Greece on the one hand, and the principality of Montenegro on the other, and as the governments of Europe stand steadfastly by the decision of their representatives, a deadlock exists, which can have only one issue—the final subjection of the Turkish government to the combined will of Europe as expressed by the conference, either by force of diplomacy or arms. If the Sultan has sufficient foresight to accept the decision, the [illegible] may obtain a new lease of life but if he prove obstinate, the end will only be reached the sooner, and the incubus which has so long remained a disgrace upon the civilization and christianity of Europe will be removed, as the sun of a Mahommedanism sets forever on the [illegible] continent.

[illegible] Government, which recently assumed the reins of power with such flattering prospects, is likely to become stranded on almost their first act of public legislation. The recent dire[illegible] experiences in Ireland have made it imperative that the government should take some active measures, not only for the relief of present distress, but to prevent the recurrence of such calamities in future. The government in their anxiety to please all parties, have suited nobody, not even themselves, and are being deserted by the representatives of both the landlords and tenants. The aristocracy, and especially the Irish landlords, are opposed to the bill which the government have introduced, and already two members of the ministry have resigned their portfolios, and there are a host of defections in the Liberal ranks. The Parnellites are also opposed to the bill, claiming that it does not go far enough and threaten to oppose the measure in a body. Should they carry out their threat the government will probably be defeated. Had the government had sufficient courage to introduce a decided measure, dealing with the difficulties which exist in Ireland, they would have received the unanimous support of the Home Rulers, and been independent of the aristocratic wing of the Liberal party. As it is, in yielding to the pressure of the landlords, between two stools they are likely to come to the ground.

—There is believed, in well informed circles, to be some foundation in fact for the rumor that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are negotiating to obtain the charter of the [illegible] and Ottawa Railway with a view of [illegible] as a branch of their railway.

—A Bowmanville despatch says that while Forepaugh's circus was passing into the exhibition ground this morning the carriage on which were seated the lion and one of the female members of the company upset. Great consternation was the result. The lion was secured.

—A run-away match was spoiled Tuesday night by detectives who arrested the flight of Annie Moreau, a beautiful [illegible] of sixteen summers from Ottawa city and Frederick Laplante aged twenty years, from the same city. The young couple say that nothing shall deter them from marriage.

—Last Sunday morning a bear passed through the clearance of E. Johnston, lot 21, 13th concession Stephenson, when a son of Mr. Johnston's shot and wounded it. The boy called his dog and without any charge in his gun followed the bear, when the animal turned on him. The boy's [illegible] then came up and found the bear tearing [illegible] pieces. He shouted and the bear left its victim dead.

Richmond Council.

RICHMOND July 5th 1880.

The Council met at Selby.

The members present, Messrs. Story, Denison, Armstrong, Provins and Sexsmith, the reeve presiding.

The minutes of the last session were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from A. B. Perry regarding the Hemp Fly Drain which was ordered to be filed for future reference.

Moved by Mr. Sexsmith, seconded by Mr. Provins, that the clerk be instructed to request Mr. [illegible] to appear at the next session of this council to give explanations with regard to his claim for damages [illegible] at his horse leaping off the bridge into the river at McKittricks. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Provins, seconded by Mr. Sexsmith, that the petitions of James Loverton, Thomas Williamson, H. B. Allison and James McKittrick asking money on roads be laid over until the appropriations are made. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Denison, seconded by Mr. Sexsmith, that Richard Woodcock, road master, be paid five dollars for gravel furnished by Mr. Grooms for Road Section No 7 and the reeve and clerk give an order for the same when taxes of 1880 are collected. Carried.

Moved and seconded, that the account of Charles McNeill for tools in Road Section No. 39 be paid. Carried.

An application was read from Mantz Jones, asking to be appointed collector for division No. one for 1880, which was ordered to be filed until the collectors are appointed.

Moved by Mr. Armstrong, seconded by Mr. Sexsmith, that the account of Daniel McHenry for [illegible] gravel, at six cents per load furnished for boundary road, be paid, and that the reeve and clerk give an order for the same payable when taxes of 1880 are collected. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Provins, seconded by Mr. Sexsmith, that the clerk be instructed to notify the road master, James Marshall, that the crossing on the side road between lots six and seven in second concession of Richmond, east of the [illegible] needs certain repairs which is necessary to be done as soon as possible. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Sexsmith, seconded by Mr. Provins, that the account of A. B. Perry for $21.15 for services rendered in connection with the Hemp Fly Drain in June 1880 be paid, and the same be charged to the Hemp Fly Drain account. Carried.

Carried.

Moved by Mr. Armstrong, seconded by Mr. Denison, that the reeve be authorized to make the necessary repairs on the bridge crossing Otter Creek in Terrence McLaughlin's Road Section. Carried.

On motion the council adjourned to meet on the first Monday in August next, at the hour of ten o'clock a.m.

A Highly Intelligent Bird.

A family living in Nashville have a parrot noted for its wonderful powers of imitating the human voice. The family also have a daughter whose special duty is the care of the parrot. The young lady has a young man, a recent addition to Nashville society. The young man called at the house of his lady love one evening and pulled the door-bell. The parrot sitting in an up-stair window, heard the jingle of the bell and called out, "Go to the window!" The young man was startled. He looked at the window below and found them closed. He pulled the bell-knob again. "Next door," shouted the parrot, in a voice not unlike the young lady's. The young man looked up and down the street in a puzzled sort of a way as if it had suddenly dawned upon his mind that he had made a mistake in the house. Concluding that he had not, he again rang the bell. "Go the house," cried Poll from her perch in the upper window. "What house?" exclaimed the young man, angrily. "The workhouse!" [illegible] the parrot. The young man [illegible] in rapid[illegible] time.

The Cash-Shannon Duel.

THE SURVIVING PRINCIPAL'S NARRATIVE OF THE TRAGEDY.

CAMDEN, S. C., July 8.—Col. E. B. C. Cash, the murderer of Col. Shannon, was visited yesterday by a reporter, and told the story of his duel on the 5th as coolly as though he were relating the incidents of a picnic. He said that Mrs. Cash, his wife, had advertised the property of her brother, Robert Ellerbee, for sale. Messrs. Shannon and De Pass instituted a suit to set aside the judgment held by Mrs. Cash on four charges, one of which was fraud. The judgment was set aside on account of informality, but the court expressly stated that no fraud was proved. Col. Cash then challenged De Pass, and Ellerbee challenged Shannon, who declined to fight him. De Pass accepted Cash's challenge and arrangements were made to fight twice, but De Pass was arrested both times on the way to the field of honor, and his bonds were placed at so heavy a figure that he declined them on the ground that it would leave his family without support.

"Subsequent to this," says Col. Cash, "a correspondence was entered into between Shannon and myself. The first letter was addressed to me by Col. Shannon on June 11, in which he intimated a desire to fight me. I declined to challenge him on the ground of inequality, he having been denounced as a poltroon and coward by Col. Ellerbee, but I intimated that a gentleman might, if challenged, fight his bootblack. Col. Shannon replied by sending me a challenge on June 27, and arrangements were made for a fight at Du Bose's Bridge, in Darlington county, about half way between Camden and Cash's Depot."

Each of the principals was attended by three friends upon the field, Dr. Lee of Darlington was present as surgeon for Cash, and Dr. Burnett of Camden as surgeon for Shannon. The fight took place at 2.30 in the afternoon. Shannon's second had the word, and Cash's second the right of choice of position. The distance was 15 yards, stepped off by the second. Johnson, Shannon's second, gave the signal for firing by the discharge of a pistol in the air. "Col. Shannon fired first, taking effect in the ground about five paces in front of me and throwing the sand in my face. At the time I thought I was shot. I fired between the words 'two' and 'three,' there being a distinct pause between my shot and that of Col. Shannon. My ball struck him, and for a moment he stood stock still, then exclaimed, 'Oh, God!' and, turning half around, staggered and fell, and was caught in the arms of his second. I am informed that he died in about five minutes, and the murderer, without the least show of feeling, "My second asked Shannon's second if he was satisfied and he answered, 'My God! what more could we ask? That is all there is to the story. I left the field and came home, and I have been here since. I am ready to give myself up whenever the sheriff wants me. [illegible] he hasn't called for me yet."

No attempt to arrest the murderer of Col. Shannon has yet been made. There is a general expression of horrible regret at the duel and its fatal result, and it is rumored that another meeting between Col. Shannon's son and Mr. W. B. Cash, Col. Cash's son, is contemplated, and that there was an agreement between the Shannons, father and son, that if the father fell in the fight the son should take up the quarrel.

A Terrible Fast.

On Sunday afternoon last several boys from Clinton went down to what is known as cook's mill dam, on the Bayfield River, adjacent to the line of the G. W. R., London, for the purpose of bathing. On the south side of the river, in Stanley township, stands an old frame barn, so much used by tramps that the owner of the barn lately seriously thought of burning it down in order to put a stop to the practice. Out of curiosity one of the boys was inspecting the interior of the building, when he was startled by a well dressed man in the corner of a garret, the cleanest part of the barn. Hastily descending and informing his companions, they proceeded to the spot and found the man alive, but exceedingly weak and scarcely able to whisper. He managed to ask for water, which on being given was eagerly drunk. A couple of the boys finding a can, milked a cow and gave him the milk, which somewhat strengthened him. They then procured some fresh eggs and gave them to him, but his stomach was too weak to retain them, and bread was given him but he could not swallow. He managed to tell them that he had been in the building since June 26, eight days and with assistance he was carried out to the grass. He was afterwards conveyed to a house at Granton, and Mr. Chidely procured medical assistance and went down to look after him. For some time it was thought he would not recover, as the beating of his pulse was imperceptible but under skilful treatment he gained strength, and was soon able to converse pretty freely. He gave his name as Wm. Ellwood, aged 6[illegible] years a former merchant of Lucan, but suffering reverses, took a position as agricultural implement agent. He said he left that place on [illegible] June, having but one [illegible] made his way as far north as the Durham line in the county of [illegible], but finding it difficult to sell the implements [illegible] said, "telling many lies," he gave up and was on his way back, walking on the railway track, where he [illegible] to the house where he was [illegible] only available place of refuge. [illegible] formed that it was strange the farmers among whom he travelled did not give him something to eat [illegible] not beg and steal he could not, and some of them asked if he was hungry, he would not tell them, and maintained that beyond some water he had drunk, not a particle more had he to eat than the one piece of bread until found by the boys, for three mornings. After first entering the building, he managed to crawl out and get some water, but could not get any other assistance, as there are no other houses in the immediate vicinity, and he re-entered the building apparently to die by the slow and terrible process of starvation, having had nothing from that time until discovered. The doctor attending him is of opinion that the man's story is perfectly reliable, his emaciated condition testifying thereto. He is now getting along as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Scandal in French Canadian Society.

A Young Frenchman named Gustave Bink, said to be a nobleman and officer in the French army, has been in Montreal for some months back, and was accepted in the best society of French Canadian citizens' with whom he became very popular. He spent his money rather freely, and was anticipating a remittance from the Fatherland when his landlady demanded of him the amount of his board. He took a gold ring belonging to a young man named [illegible] and pawned it for three dollars, and when [illegible] acknowledged taking it, but said he did not steal it, having only [illegible] it for a few days until his remittance should arrive. Melancholy Accident.

Amongst a large party who left town Monday morning per steamer Alexandra, for a fortnight's pleasure trip, was to have been Miss Marian Potter, teacher in the Octavia Street Public School of Belleville. As the lady happened to miss the boat there, she took the noon train for Kingston, with the intention of joining the steamer there. The steamer arrived at Kingston an hour behind time, at about 9 o'clock. Shortly after the arrival of the steamer Miss Potter, who was accompanied by a porter from the Anglo-American Hotel carrying her trunk, entered upon the wharf (Gunn's) and they were met by a cab which had been to the steamer with a passenger, and which was then proceeding towards the city. The porter stepped to the right and Miss Potter to the left, and in doing so she fell into the water, which is there about six feet deep. The noise of her fall was not heard, owing to the rain and to the fact that the wheels of the cab were then crunching over some broken stones, hence no immediate effort was made to rescue the unfortunate lady. The intense darkness also prevented her from being missed for a moment. The porter—who was Patrick Salmon, formerly of this city—proceeded a few steps and then turned to see if Miss Potter was following him, when the cabman said he thought she had fallen into the water. Salmon at once procured assistance, and soon a number of men with lanterns were at work looking for the body, which was not recovered until about twenty minutes after it had fallen into the water. The remains were at once taken to the Anglo-American Hotel, where one medical man who had already arrived, immediately commenced the effort to restore animation. He was soon joined by two other doctors, and all three gentlemen exerted their utmost skill, but without avail.

It is believed that after going to the bottom deceased had not risen again to the surface, as a large Newfoundland dog at Hatch's wharf, which heard the splash made as she fell, jumped into the water and swam about the spot. It is said that had she risen, this animal, which has a great reputation as a life saver, would have prevented her from sinking until assistance arrived.—Belleville Intelligencer.

A Russian Prisoner's Hardships.

A strange story of the hardships of Russian captivity is related by a German engineer named Neumeyer. He was busily engaged in superintending the construction of a new railway in the south of Russia, when, on Dec. 12 last, he saw himself suddenly surrounded by a body of police, and made prisoner. On being shown a photograph portrait, innocently exclaimed "Where have you got this picture from? I have never had my likeness taken." This extraordinary resemblance of his to Louis Hartmann, or rather Wolkoff—the alleged author of the Moscow attempt on the Emperor's life—and a scar on his right hand, brought poor Neumeyer into a serious predicament. He was put in chains, taken to Warsaw, submitted to a wearisome investigation, then dragged across country on foot to Warsaw, with no nourishment other than bread, cabbage, and spoiled fish on a journey of forty-four days. After spending about six weeks more in prison on bread and water surrounded by a low set of criminals awaiting their transportation to Siberia, he succeeded in forwarding a letter to the Governor General [illegible], whose brother had formerly employed Neumeyer on his estates in [illegible]. Thanks to Count [illegible] intercession, Count Loris Melikoff allowed the poor victim to return to Germany in a penniless condition, covered with vermin, and wearing the same clothes in which he had been seized, and which had never been washed.

A Rather Numerous Snake Story.

The Darlington Hawkeye is responsible for the following: The increased number of snakes in this vicinity since the late rise in the river has been a matter of general remark among our citizens. Among the many startling stories which have been rife during the flood, none is more remarkable than that told of a man near Sagetown, Ill. The story runs that he took a skiff and rowed over the placid back-water to witness the devastation of his hitherto promising acres. He was soon startled by the appearance of a snake which swiftly darted into his little boat.

But his wonder was increased to amazement when snake after snake rapidly trailed his slimy body into the skiff, and thus they continued till the capacity of the watery conveyance became insufficient to contain the slimy reptiles and the disheartened farmer without too close proximity. The predicament was momentarily increasing with horror, but a moment was given in which to choose death by the venomous creepers or death in a watery grave. He chose the chances of the latter and plunged into the water.

Half dead he was found on the shore that afternoon, where he had been washed, clinging to a friendly board which he happened to grasp when in the last stage of drowning. The boat was found drift[illegible] [illegible]

The Gatling Gold Mine.

At a meeting of stockholders of the Gatling Gold and Silver Mining Company, held in this city last week, an offer was presented on behalf of Mr. R. P. Rothwell to purchase the property of the Company, the amount being $100,000. After some consideration the offer was accepted. It will be remembered that some time since this property was bonded to Mr. Rothwell [illegible] New York [illegible] for the sum of $280,000, and Mr. Rothwell commenced operations of development on an extensive scale, which were carried on for three or four months. At the May meeting of the stockholders, a proposition to purchase the property for $100,000 was made and voted down. Since that time, Mr. Rothwell had, it appears, organized in New York, the Canada Consolidated Company, and had purchased the Gee-Tuttle property, adjoining the Gatling Co.'s land for $40,000, and some other valuable properties in the vicinity, and with a view to consolidate the whole into one company, made another offer of $100,000 for the Gatling Co's lands and mills, which offer as above stated was submitted to a meeting of the stockholders and accepted.

We understand that the parties associated with Mr. Rothwell are men of capital and large mining experience, and that they intend to proceed with the development of the property at once and on an extensive scale.

Clever Capture.

It has been said that the worst place in Canada for a thief to strike for the purpose of doing business is Hamilton, and a case has just occurred which goes to prove the truth of the allegation. Last night, about ten o'clock, the residence of Mr. Wm Smith, Cathcart street below Cannon, was entered by some parties and fifty dollars in money stolen. While in conversation with some hackmen at the corner of Merrick and James streets, Detective McPherson was informed of the robbery. This was about eleven o'clock. The detective at once thought of the fact that he had seen two men pass him a short time before, one of whom Frank Murray, who a short time before had got out of the penitentiary, where he had served a term for a robbery of jewellery committed at Clifton. McPherson at once drove to the G. W. R., expecting that the thieves would take the 11:30 train east, but on arrival there found out that his man was not to be found, having evidently scented danger. From enquiries subsequently made he discovered that Murray had been driven to the station by a man named John McDonald, hackman, and that on perceiving he was followed had driven off again. This manœuvre somewhat disturbed the detective's clue, but he did not despair, and by diligent inquiry ascertained that the party had driven out of city on the Dundas road. A rig was procured and the trail taken up. On reaching Ancaster, the detective was informed that his man had just left for Brantford. The trail was then taken up for Brantford and from that to Cainsville where McPherson found his man. Murray resisted arrest to his utmost, inflicting on the detective a number of kicks and blows of a serious character. Mac had, however, gone for his man, and was determined not to return without him, and he didn't. After his arrest Murray was taken to Brantford, leaving that city at 2 o'clock a. m. in company with his captor, and at 11:25 arriving here. On being arraigned before Mr. Cahill, the prisoner admitted his guilt. Sentence was deferred until Saturday to ascertain Murray's antecedents in full.—Hamilton Times.

War of Races.

ATCHISON, Kas., 14.—The contractor for the excavation work at East Atchison Missouri, engaged several colored men. A drunken mob armed with revolvers and knives to-day compelled them to quit work.

The crowd increasing proceeded to the brick yards of Seth & Co., where colored men were employed, and drove the colored men over the river. The mob then [illegible] several hundred, and was vainly addressed by the mayor of Atchison and others, urging peace and order. The colored drivers of transfer teams were compelled to turn back over the bridge. Colored porters at various [illegible] depots and other darkies in town were hunted up and sent over into Kansas.

The authorities telegraphed to sheriff Spencer of St. Joseph but he refused to come. The mob have possession of East Atchison and defy the law and militia. The people of Atchison who are largely interested in industries across the river are indignant at the disgraceful proceedings and unless the officers of Buchanan county do their duty to-morrow, the people here will prepare to take a hand in the affair.

A Melancholy Accident.

HALIFAX, 12th.—A sad accident occured this afternoon to Mrs. Charles Tupper, daughter-in-law of Sir Charles Tupper, which may result fatally. While driving from the city to her residence at the Northwest Arm this afternoon, somewhere the corner of Oxford street, the street before reaching her house, the horse took fright and ran off. The carriage was upset, Mrs. Tupper thrown some ten feet into the air, and came down on the [illegible] on her knees and face, receiving severe internal injuries. She was conveyed to her home, and her husband summoned, and she remained unconscious till 11 o clock, at which hour she was very low. Mrs. Tupper is a daughter of [illegible] James McDonald, Minister of Justice, and has only been married about six months.

Mrs Tupper is reported doing better this evening. She had several bones fractured.

A Bogus Duke.

A Frenchman, giving the name of Edward Lefevre, who arrived at Buffalo a year ago claiming to be a French duke, turns out an impostor. Lefevre, through the help of many friends, was employed in the jewelry business and soon afterward obtained numerous letters purporting to come from France, stating that immense estates were soon to be sold at a valuation of 250,000, that he would take an entire [illegible] his library, silverware, &c. On the strength of these letters he succeeded in being able to live [illegible] ranging from $100 to $1,000. He also married his landlady's daughter two years ago. He left the city last Friday, and is supposed to have gone to Canada.

Illinois Crop Prospects.

CHICAGO, July 14.—The State Board of Agriculture makes a report of the crops [illegible] complete, based upon returns [illegible] from each county in the State to the first of July, showing that the farm product will be larger by millions of dollars than ever before. The wheat average is 23 per cent. larger than last year. Corn is about the same as last; oats 15 per cent. more; hay crop nearly double; Irish potato crop immense, and the sweet potato larger than ever before. All sorts of fruit in fine condition.

—It is Scarcely Possible to allow the present unusual mortality amongst children in New York to pass unnoticed. From day to day paragraphs, solemnly brief, announce the continuance of what must be considered a serious epidemic amongst the young, as many as sixty and seventy children falling victims to the oppressive heat [illegible] for many days in succession been beating down upon the devoted head of the mighty city. The very absence of fuller details may unnecessarily alarm those whose distance from the place prevents enquiry as to the cause, and it may therefore be well to point out that almost every case can be traced to improper ventilation of housing and overcrowding, for it is in the tenement houses that most of the victims are to be found. Doubtless it will become necessary to introduce fresh measures for checking this prolific source of danger, and watching with greater vigilance the carrying out of existing regulations having the same object in view.

—A piece of unexampled ruffianism [illegible] [illegible]

—The worst flood since '62, occurred at Pueblo, Colorado, on the 14th July. A torrent of water came down with a rush carrying everything before it. Thirty persons were camping in the river bottom and but one escaped. The railroad was washed out 20 miles from the town. The river rose eight feet in less than an hour. Emigrants encamped along the bottom lost nearly everything. The flood was caused by a cloud bursting.

—A notorious desperado, for whose capture $500 had been offered, was caught in Oregon, by two constables. They had to convey him a hundred miles in a waggon, and, knowing his reckless character, they tied him to the seat. On the way he tried several devices to escape but in vain, until he hit upon the desperate one of firing a keg of powder that was in the vehicle. He crouched as low as possible, and shielded his face so that he was not seriously injured. One of the constables was killed, and the other burned so badly that he could do nothing to prevent the prisoner from getting away.

—The Dundas Banner says:—We are requested by Mayor Waddell to state that having won a magnificent five-story cake at the House of Providence picnic, and having no use for such an article himself, he will make a present of it to the first Dundas girl who, after this date, can induce some gentleman to enter into the holy state of matrimony with her. The only restriction is that the Mayor must have the first kiss from the bride. Now, then, girls, it's leap year, and remember the first one gets the cake. Who speaks first?

—Miss Browning, of Denton, Texas, had two suitors who were inclined to slay each other. Being of a religious turn of mind, and desiring to make peace between them, she invited both to attend a church meeting and escort her home. Her plan was to bring them to an amicable, Christian understanding. To effect this she prayed fervently in the meeting that all enemies might become friends. But her scheme failed, for when the two men met in the porch, each determined on carrying off the prize, there was a fight, and one was killed.

The demand for the "Myrtle Navy" tobacco is still on the increase, and from every quarter the firm who make it are receiving unsolicited testimony of its growth in public favor. A gentleman from one of the mining island of Lake Huron writes, "Your 'Myrtle Navy' is an invaluable solace to the loneliness of the miner's life. I don't know how our men could get along without it. If their stock ran out they would risk swimming to the mainland to replenish it, heedless of danger, and I believe they would cross the ice in winter on the same errand if it was not more than an inch thick. No other tobacco will satisfy them."

We are requested to announce that Rev. Rural Dean Bogert will (D. V.) officiate at St. John's Church, Selby, on Sunday next at 3 P. M.

Rain Storm.

A very heavy fall of rain was received in this section on Monday afternoon and night. It will greatly benefit late grain, root crops and fruit.

Discharged.

James O'Brien, of Roblin, on Saturday last appeared on a charge of selling liquor without a license, but as the evidence was not conclusive, he was discharged.

Injury to Barley.

The heavy rain of Monday night has slightly discolored some of the barley along the bay front, which had already ripened. Farther back the grain is not so far advanced, and was therefore not injured.

Drowned in the Bay.

A despatch says that a young man named George Bailey, aged 17 years, was drowned at Mill Point on Sunday last, while bathing with his brother off one of Messrs. Rathbun's lumber docks.

— Beautiful satin striped muslin, only 8 cents, at Cheapside.

Removing the Nuisance.

Several corporations along the bay shore are removing the dead fish which have been making the atmosphere intolerable, through the stench of their decaying remains. Twenty two waggon loads were removed off the beach at the Sandbanks in Prince Edward county.

Examination.

The examination of candidates for third class certificates, commenced on Tuesday, under the supervision of the Board of Public Instruction, all the members being present except Rev. Mr. Bogert, who was absent attending the funeral of his mother. The examination closed at 1.30 P. M. on Friday.

Obit.

We regret to have to record the death of Mrs. Bogert, of Brockville, mother of Rev. Rural Dean Bogert, Napanee, and Rev. D. F. Bogert, Selby, at an advanced age, which event took place at her home on Saturday last. She was a lady highly respected, having lived a long and useful life, and her decease, though not unexpected, will be deeply mourned by a large circle of friends.

Attempted Robbery.

As Mr. Thomas Anderson was getting off the one o'clock train at Napanee station on Sunday morning, four men whom he had previously noticed hanging around the platform, obstructed his passage, and as he was passing out, one made a grab at his pocket book which was in the breast pocket of his coat. The man missed it, however, and made himself scarce as quickly as possible.

Weights and Measures.

Mr. Griffen, inspector of Weights and Measures, arrived on Saturday last on an official tour and is at present engaged in inspecting the weights and measures in Napanee. He is accompanied by Mr. James Gray, of Montreal, practical scale maker, who occupies the rear part of the building formerly used by Mr. S. T. John's as a carriage shop, where he adjusts weights and scales. Mr. Gray is a first-class workman, and has testimonials from some of the largest dealers in the Dominion. Parties need have no fear of entrusting scales with him for repair.

Pickpockets.

As usual a band of light-fingered gentry accompanied the circus which exhibited in Napanee on Saturday last, but so far we have not learned that they were very successful in their operations. Mr. Daniel Parrott, of Wilton, went into the crowd in front of the ticket waggon, to purchase his ticket, but he [illegible]

OUR SHIRT DEPARTMENT

It was new to [illegible] not see how her coins [illegible] this apparently [illegible] was he conscious of [illegible] calculated to produce that [illegible] he should think for her and [illegible] seemed to him the merest [illegible]; but to her this protesting forethought was wholly new and unexpected. Even the tone of good-humored authority in which he spoke touched her with a [illegible] delight. It was so good to feel that there was still some one to take care of her.

"You are not displeased?" he said, finding that she made no reply. "Have I taken too much upon myself?"

"How should I be displeased? How can I be anything but grateful?"

"Hush!" he said, quickly. "That word is out of place, Winifred, between you and me. It pains me."

"But you think of everything."

"That is not wonderful. It only shows that I have a little common sense and a moderate amount of experience. I am, of course, anxious that you should be comfortably lodged, and properly cared for."

He paused a moment, then added, hesitatingly, "As anxious as if you were my own sister."

Did the words chill her, or had it turned colder? The dying dusk, at all events, was suddenly extinguished, the sky became black overhead, and it began to rain.

"Here comes another storm," he said. "We must run for it, or we shall be wet through before we reach shelter."

They quickened their steps; but they had scarcely neared the house when it poured in torrents. In the porch he put out his hand to say "good-by," but she would not hear of his going till the storm was over. So they went in, and Bridget served him with coffee in the oak parlor.

"I see you now for the first time," he said when the old woman had lit the candles, and left the room. "Heavens! how ill you look!"

She looked ill indeed; her eyes unnaturally large, and ringed round with dark circles, her face and lips bloodlessly pale; and in the expression not of her face only, but of her very hands there was a worn, spiritless look that struck him with dismay.

"But I am not ill—at least, I think not," she replied. "I am only tired and lonely."

Still he looked at her, and the more he looked, the more he was troubled.

"Yes, you are right," he said. "The sooner you get away, the better. Of course it is lonely—horribly lonely. I suppose I have not realized it till now. Poor child!"

"Nay," she said, forcing a smile, "the things have been seized by visitors all the week. But I am very ungrateful. I should be more thankful if they had staid away, or [illegible] cards."

"How soon can you be ready?"

"For the journey?"

"Yes, for the journey."

"Immediately—at two hours' notice."

"But have you no purchases to make—nothing to do in the way of preparation?"

"I think not. At all events if I want anything I will buy it over there."

"But for travelling? Remember it is winter. You will want furs, rugs, travelling wraps."

She shook her head.

"It doesn't matter," she said, indifferently. "I have a cloak, and Bridget will find me some shawls. Besides, I should hate to go into Singleton, where I have never been without—her."

The last word came with a sob.

"It is very foolish," she said, brushing her tears away. "I shall be better by-and-by. Only—but it is my first great sorrow, you know."

"No, Winifred, not the first."

The blood rushed in a torrent to her face, so white the moment before.

"No, no," she said, confusedly. "I don't mean that, of course—not altogether, at least. But no one was the same to me as Aunt Hester—not even Uncle Stephen. As for Cuthbert, that was not like a sudden blow—not as if we had known for certain."

"It was worse than certainty," he said, gloomily.

"It was worse, in one way. And yet one could not mourn as one would have mourned, had it been certain. I mean it was a different kind of sorrow. You will not misunderstand me, Lancelot? You know how much I owed to his goodness—how I honored him—"

"Ay, but it was honor—not love."

"Lancelot!"

Their eyes met—fire in his, alarm in hers.

"Forgive me!" he stammered. "I ought not to have said it."

Then, finding that she was silent, he added hurriedly, almost defiantly:

"But what does it matter? I have always known it. The words have been on my lips a hundred times before, and now at last they have escaped me—that is all. And, dear, why need you mind? Why look so distressed? You would have loved him if you could. I know you tried to school your heart, but it was of no use. The fault was not yours. How could you help it? What woman ever yet loved a man merely because he desired to be loved, or because it was her duty to love him? Love comes unsought—unbidden—unexpected."

He took her hand—the hand that felt so cold, and looked so tired. She drew it quickly away.

"I was not worthy of him," she said tremulously. "You cannot reproach me more than I reproach myself."

"Heavens and earth! Winifred, I am not reproaching you. I do not even reproach myself; though God knows there have been times when—"

"Hush!" she said, interrupting him. "What is past is past. Let us only remember that you are his brother, and that I am going away. I think the storm is over."

This was said with a dignity, a decision, that silenced and almost abashed him.

"You are right," he said confusedly. "I beg your pardon."

Then, after a pause full of embarrassment to both, he said.

"I am going now, but before I go, can you give me an idea as to when you will wish to start?"

"Can I go on Tuesday?"

"Certainly—when you please."

"But what must I do? Where must I go first?"

"You must first go to London, and thence by way of Paris or Brussels. But leave all that to me. In the mean while, what about Christine, your maid? Would you like to have her over here at once, or shall she meet you at the station?"

"What do you mean? She is not in England?"

"She is by this time at Old Court, having, I dare say, with Church and his wife [illegible]. I knew you would require her on the journey."

Again her cheek was warmed by a momentary flush—a flush of surprise, or pleasure, or gratitude, or pleasure or perhaps of all three. But she only said very quietly,

"Thank you; I think I would rather [illegible] by her at the station."

"Very good. The express goes at forty-five [illegible] past [illegible] London [illegible] time for the mail-train to Dover. Will it fatigue you too much to go so far as Dover the first day?"

"Not at all. I should like if possible to go still farther."

"As far as Calais? Well, you will see when the time comes. And it is to be on Tuesday next?"

"Yes."

"Then I will meet you, with Christine, at Singleton station, at twenty minutes before ten. Till then, good-by."

She put out her hand. She longed to say something more than "good-by," but what, she hardly knew. To thank him seemed all at once to have become strangely difficult.

So she said only, "Good-by."

CHAPTER XXXIV.

FROM OLD TO NEW?

"What a wonderful place!"

They had been travelling all night and all the previous day, and now it was eight o'clock in the morning, and they were standing in the market place at Brussels.

It had been a weary journey, confusing and troubled and full of changes. First the parting; Bridget lamenting that she should never live to see her young lady back again, and Jean in floods of tears. Then, at the turn of the road, the last blurred glimpse of the old home. Then the cold wet drive in the old hooded chaise; the draughty station; Lancelot waiting to hand her out; Christine, a tall rosy-cheeked damsel in a round black bonnet and dark gray cloak; the coming train; a last sight of Reuben blubbering in the background; and a strange feeling that all the old familiar faces and places were every moment being left farther and farther and farther behind. Thus many hours were passed, and the early December afternoon closed in, and by-and-by there was a glitter of innumerable lamps, a running to and fro, a bewildering crowd, a huge station, and then Winifred found herself in a cab driving through miles of lighted streets. This was London. Then another station, another railway carriage, an interval of forgetfulness, a sudden waking up; a sloping gangway, with a sound of surging water below. Lancelot's voice at the cabin door; the gangway all over again, soldiers, porters, custom-house officials, a chatter of French voices; [illegible]—Calais. Here Winifred declaring she was not tired, and begging to be allowed to travel all night, they warmed themselves at a good fire, had food and coffee in the Buffet, and were off again by the midnight express. Then came the night journey to Brussels, Winifred and Christine in a compartment to themselves, where, warmly wrapped in rugs and shawls, they slept profoundly all the rest of the night. When they woke, the day was just dawning. The lamp overhead was extinguished, and the window had become a square of pale gray light in which lay ghostly flats, and lines of spectral poplars fading into mist. Then, as the light waxed stronger, the scattered outskirts of a large city came into view, and presently the train ran into another big station, and they were at Brussels.

Here they were to take a day's rest, and go to a hotel.

Driving through the streets, in which the shop-keepers had not yet begun to take down their shutters, they came to the market-place, then at its busiest hour, and alighted, the better to enjoy this bright and busy scene—one of the most picturesque that Europe has to show.

The mists had now dispersed, and the sun was breaking through rent and rolling masses of fast-vanishing cloud. Straight before stood the Hotel de Ville, its innumerable windows all a-glitter, its noble tower flecked with light and shadow, its weather-cock saint, now bronze in shade, now gold in shine, flashing and shifting with the wind. The Broodhuis opposite was in deep shadow, as befitted the scene of a great tragedy; while all round, crowded together as if they had not half room enough, stood the quaint Guild and Corporation houses of old days, with their gable fronts, and jutting balconies, and faded scroll-work and gilding.

The great square in their midst was one parti-colored garden and vegetable stalls, all alive with buyers and sellers, and movement, and life; and in the air was a multitudinous humming of many voices, and a clattering of brass pails, and a tramping of wooden shoes, and a cracking of whips, and a lumbering of heavy wheels.

Well might Winifred exclaim it was "a wonderful place."

She was breathless, dazzled, as naive in her wonder as a delighted child. Clinging to Lancelot's arm, the fatigue of the journey all forgotten, she listened as in a dream to the stories he was telling about Egmont and Horn, the Duchess of Richmond's ball, and eve of Waterloo; and though people turned their heads to look after her, the brown broad-cheeked market-women smiled and and nodded, and jabbered unintelligible praises of her fair young English face, she [illegible] was too much taken up with the novelty of the scene to be even conscious that she was looked at.

"They are just married," said a bright-eyed old body installed behind a pile of fruit and flowers.

"Nay how can that be, and the in black?" exclaimed another, who sold sabots and crockery.

"Her mourning is quite new, too."

"Well, then, they are lovers."

And holding out a handful of white roses, she said in her guttural Flemish,

"My handsome monsieur will buy some flowers for his beautiful young lady?"

She was a pleasant-looking old woman, her cap covered all over with tiny quillings of fine Mechlin lace, and a pair of gold ear-rings in her ears; and her appeal, which needed no knowledge of the language to understand, was irresistible. So Lancelot bought the roses, and Winifred carried them all the rest of the way.

Then they went to their hotel and breakfasted; and by-and-by he took her to see the Church of St. Gudule, and the Place des Martyrs, and the shops in the Galerie St. Hubert; and in the evening they went on again, and travelled all night as before, arriving in the morning at Coblentz, where the railway (then in course of construction) came to and end. They, however, found a steamer waiting the arrival of the train, and so went on by water to Mayence, and then again by rail to Frankfort, where they put up again for twenty-four hours. Here next day they saw the house of Goethe, and Schwanthaler's statue of the poet, and the portraits of the Kaisers in the old Town-hall; and from Frankfort, being rested and refreshed, they made but one more stage of it, going straight to Munich, where they arrived late in the afternoon of the fourth day since leaving Singleton station.

There had been some feeling of embarrassment on both sides at starting, and the first day went by uncomfortably. But the [illegible] of the following [illegible] by dispelled that little cloud, and [illegible] there had been one [illegible] [illegible] would they have travelled [illegible] to [illegible] when she started, the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] very first morning in the market place at Brussels? In simple truth, the poor child was entertained, and happy, and taken out of herself and her own cares for the first time in her dull life. Everything around her—everything passing before her in quick succession, turned her thoughts into new channels, and kept her attention on the stretch. Then there was Lancelot always taking care of her; seeing that the foot-warmer was changed, and that the rugs were wrapped closely around her; getting her grapes at this station, and flowers at that. How could she help being content and amused and happy, if only for a few short days?

It was by her own desire that they came by that route, and so quickly. She would have gone straight through from London to Munich if Lancelot had consented.

"And you are positively not tired?" he asked her again and again.

But she always replied that she was less tired than when they first started.

And yet, in her heart, she would fain have had their journey last forever.

It was eight o'clock in the evening when they reached Munich, and they found the Kreutzmann family at supper. The good people had not expected their English guests for another day or two; but they hurried out to meet and greet the strangers, and were none the less cordial because taken by surprise. Frau Kreutzmann, a buxom housewife with a leathern satchel hanging at her girdle, took Winifred by both hands, kissed her on both cheeks, and bade her welcome to the house. The gray-haired pastor, in well-worn black coat and knee-breeches, helped to bring in her luggage. The two nieces—fair, smiling damsels, with braided hair and embroidered caps, and skirts just short enough to show a pretty foot and a buckled shoe—took off her cloak and hat, put her in a big chair by the fire, chafed her cold hands and said welcoming words which needed no translation though spoken in German. Christine, meanwhile, having come in for her share of greetings and kisses, slipped quietly back into her old place in the household; fetched clean plates and mugs; placed chairs at the upper end of the table for Winifred and Lancelot, and a stool for herself at the bottom; and presently they were all supping together in the good old patriarchal Bavarian fashion, off hot pudding, black bread, stewed fruit, and home-made cheese.

It was a big room with whitewashed walls and one huge beam traversing the ceiling from end to end. The floor was carpetless; the boards were spotless; the windows hung with clean muslin curtains. In one corner stood a large stove, covered with shining white tiles, through the open door of which a ray of warm red light flowed out along the floor. On the walls, in plain black frames, hung a few good prints, a gun, some antlers, and other sporting trophies.

Presently, supper being ended, the parson said grace; the nieces ran up stairs to prepare Winifred's room, and Christine cleared the table. Then the old man took down his silver-mounted rifle, the stock curiously cut out to fit the rifleman's shoulder, and told them how it had been given to him by his parishioners on his wedding day, thirty years ago. A rare good rifle of the old sort—none better. Many a steinbok had he stalked and shot with it. See yonder horns—three feet and a half from root to tip. That was a king of steinboks, that one—the finest he had ever brought down. The Fraulein was looking on that trophy of tails— Foxes? No, no—not foxes. Wolves. Wolves every one. Plenty of wolves in the woods beyond Sternberg; ay, and bears, too, for that matter. He had shot many a grizzly in his young days, before he was married.

Thus he chattered, and the time passed quickly. By-and-by a cuckoo clock struck ten, whereupon Pastor Kreutzmann brought out a ponderous old German Bible, read a chapter aloud, and invoked a blessing upon his assembled family, and upon the strangers who were within his gates.

"Do you think you shall like it?" said Lancelot, as he bade Winifred good-night.

"I like the place and the people better than any place or people I ever saw," she replied, with a happy smile.

Then the girls conducted her to her room, and Frau Kreutzman brought her a cup of some kind of hot tisane after she was in bed, and long before eleven the whole household was asleep.

No More White Butter.

No dairyman can afford to make and sell white butter. People who buy butter want it yellow, and are willing to pay several cents per pound more for it than they would for the lardy looking stuff they often have to take. By using Wells, Richardson & Co's Perfected Butter Color, every dairyman can have the golden color of June the year round. It is sold by druggists and merchants generally.

Yarker Cemetery.

Mr. Editor,—

Being in Yarker and having an hour or two at my disposal, I availed myself of the opportunity to visit the Yarker cemetery, which is owned by J. A. Shibley, Esq., who kindly volunteered to accompany me through the grounds. We entered the cemetery from the south side, passing through the beautiful grove which crowns the summit of the hill south of the village. This grove forms a back ground to the cemetery. Seats for the accommodation of visitors, of whom there are many, have been placed in the grove, and from there a splendid view of the vault and cemetery can be enjoyed. Passing to the lower part of the grove, we came upon the vault, a fine structure, erected by Mr. Shibley, at considerable expense. A more suitable site for the building could scarcely have been found. Leaving the vault "in the shade" (of the grove), we next visited the cemetery. But now, Mr. Editor, my descriptive powers fail to portray the beauties of this place. It would have to be visited to be fully appreciated. Situated as it is upon an eminence, it commands a view of the surrounding country. In front and at a considerable distance below, is the Napanee River, meandering through meadow and wood; to the left, the village of Colebrook seems to be almost within reach; while to the right is the busy little village of Yarker. The main road between these two villages passes just at the foot of the hill on which the cemetery is situated, so that a grand view is had in either direction by persons driving this road. Seemingly, no pains or expense has been spared in fitting up the grounds. This "beautiful city of the dead" has been tastefully and systematically laid out in avenues. Around the centre is a circular drive, from which are walks running to the centre and crossing at right angles. At this point is an arbor of trees, to be fitted up with seats, etc. Below this circular drive, and connected with it by many short drives, is one which runs along both side of the grounds. From this are drives leading to several gates, which open to the public road. At present Mr. Shibley is having evergreen trees, as well as other varieties, set out along the walks and drives. This place, beautiful at present, will be still more so when the arrangements are fully completed. A number of persons have already manifested their appreciation of Mr. Shibley's efforts by disinterring the remains of friends and bringing them to this place. There are some fine monuments in the cemetery, and the graves are well kept. I doubt not this will be a favorite burying place when all is completed and the cemetery opened to the public, which will shortly be done. Due notice will doubtless be given. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space I have taken in your paper, and hoping that you may be permitted to visit this place, which has already attracted much attention, judging from the numerous visitors,

I remain, yours, etc.,

A FRIEND TO ENTERPRISE.

Medical.

To the Editor of The Beaver.

Sir,—Having noticed in a recent issue of your paper a case of lockjaw, or, technically speaking, tetanus, which came under the care of a Dr. Wilson, and was surgically treated by him with success, and in which the body of the patient is described as resting on the crown of the head and toes, the abdomen describing an arch of about six inches, permit me a small space in your valuable columns for the mention of a similar case which came under my notice last summer, the patient being a child of Mr. George T. Scammith, of Richmond township, and aged about five years. When called I found him suffering under well-marked tetanic spasms, and searching for a cause I asked his mother if he had lately sustained any injury in the way of a bruise or scratch, and she immediately related that she had lately taken a sliver out of the bottom of his foot, and upon examination I readily perceived the mark, and the cause was now apparent. I at once proceeded to treat the little sufferer medicinally, and although the body was distorted by muscular contractions, resting at one time on the crown and toes, the abdomen forming an arch and again resting upon the head and heels, the back forming a similar arch. I had the gratification of seeing the spasms grow gradually less frequent, and at length cease, and although on the following day there was a short return, they again disappeared, and after a few days the child was itself again. I might mention another case which came under my care in Kingston, the patient being a boy of about ten years, and the cause a scratch of a rusty nail along the muscles of the thigh, obtained when sliding down an old roof, by way of diversion. This case also recovered, and encouraged by the above noticed article, I mention these cases to show that the skill and labour of medical men are occasionally rewarded with success in the treatment of formidable diseases, but that professional etiquette restrains them from making public what would be of much interest.

MEAGHER'S LIME WORKS.

THE BEST LIME.

THE CHEAPEST LIME!

JAMES MEAGHER

informs the public that he has constructed and has in constant operation one of the best Lime Kilns in the Dominion, with a capacity of 300 or 400 bushels of Lime daily. The furnace is constructed on an improved plan, so that the coal used in burning, with the cinders and lime dust, is completely separated from the result lime. Coal is so much cheaper than wood for this purpose, and the facilities and conveniences are so perfect that he can turn out lime cheaper and better than any other kiln in the country.

Lime for Plastering, Lime for Brickwork, Lime for Stonework, approved by the best builders and architects.

Building and Coursing Stone always on hand.
